Dear Business Owner:

The Organic Farming Conference was started to give organic-minded farmers an opportunity to gather and share ideas and stories about their farms and practices. It provides a chance to learn new things and about the many tools for organic farming. Our audience is a mixture of experienced and inexperienced farmers, as well as supporters of organic farming and products. They include dairy, beef, sheep, poultry, and other livestock farmers, organic produce growers, beekeepers, and many others. In addition to agriculture presentations, we have the Organic Home section. This provides a place for women to share their unique knowledge and experience. This section is geared, but not limited to, food preparation, healthy lifestyle choices, as well as potential new enterprises for the whole family.

The conference will be held at the Mt. Hope Event Center in Mt. Hope, Ohio on November 12th and 13th, 2026.

Our presenters this year include dairy farmers: Allen Weaver, Marcus Martin (OH), Melissa Weyland (WI), and others. They will be talking about their farms and ways to remain profitable. Alvin Peachy's (PA) key points will be on maximizing yields and if dairy farming is still a viable option with today's dairy economics. Jesse Frost, an expert on growing produce and marketing, will have three presentations. Others will share their expertise on soil health, direct marketing, and more. There will be panels on renting land and farmers mentoring farmers. We aim for a balance in subjects, experiences, and diverse enterprises.

In the Organic Home we'll have a panel and discussion on caring for our elderly, topics on plant propagation, learning disabilities in children, the benefits of tallow, healthy coffee drinks, and more. There is a lot of interest in simple, organic living, and we are excited for the growth we have seen in the women's section.

All attendees will receive a full-course, delicious organic lunch, plus cheese, pickles, and more for a snack. We've had people say it's worth coming, just for the meal!

The conference is non- profit and self-funded through vendors and registration by the participants. We appreciate your consideration!
